As a business owner I wanted a more professional and high-touch means of communicating with my team, our clients and vendors. I found a gap in the market and started building gravatate.

Why you may want to support us...

1. Early users are expanding the use of gravatate, adding 100's of team members, sharing thousands of files and events. All very positive!
2. We have some early evangelists who are helping spread the gravatate love. This is also very positive and helps us refine our viral model.
3. Most users are asking for the same improvements, which gives us confidence that once we deliver those, more users will follow.

The Story of Gravatate

We are business professionals. We wanted to run our business without chaos, without endless searching through email or text messages for information. And, we wanted a more white-glove communication and collaboration experience for our employees, vendors, partners and clients. We didn't find the right tool in the market, so we built it.

We help professionals achieve success by streamlining communication and enhancing the collaboration experience

Most communication tools are built looking inward to serve employees alone. Gravatate was built to serve the new economy, where cross-company relationships are the most common by virtue of having part-time employees, strategic vendors, and clients all with different technology preferences that do not fit well into competing solutions.

We make it simple and affordable for these professionals across business, non-profit and higher education to chat and form collaboration workspaces to drive success in less time, with less chaos.

Below is our potential future design, which together with product performance improvements is intended to enable scaled growth.
