RENTOKIL INITIAL TO ACQUIRE US PEST CONTROL COMPANY

Rentokil Initial plc announces that it has entered into an agreement to acquire J.C. Ehrlich Co. Inc. ('Ehrlich') for a consideration of US$141.8 million (£80.1 million). Ehrlich is the largest independently-owned pest control company in the US and the fourth largest pest control company in the US overall. The transaction will be financed from available cash resources.

Pest Control is one of Rentokil Initial's main business drivers, along with Washrooms and Textiles, for the creation of sustainable, profitable growth. Rentokil Initial is already the European market leader in pest control and has strong market positions in Asia Pacific and South Africa. The proposed acquisition of Ehrlich will significantly increase the company's scale in the attractive North American market, where Rentokil's existing operations have been growing strongly.

Ehrlich, based in Reading, Pennsylvania, was established in 1928 by Julius C. Ehrlich and has continued to be owned and managed by the descendants of the family for four generations. It operates 42 branches across seven Eastern states, providing a full range of pest control services to commercial and residential customers. In the year ended 31 December 2005, Ehrlich had revenues of US$124.0 million (£70.0 million).

Rentokil Initial's North American pest control operations, with revenues in 2005 of approximately US$26.0 million (£14.7 million), are currently focused on commercial customers in complementary geographic regions. The combined business will provide Rentokil Initial with a platform for further growth, building on both companies' strong customer service ethos and technological innovation.

Victor Hammel, currently President of Ehrlich, will assume the role of CEO of the combined pest control operations which will be based at Ehrlich's existing headquarters in Reading, Pennsylvania. Kevin Ward, current President of Rentokil's pest control operations in North America, will join the combined organisation's senior management team.

The agreement is subject to customary closing conditions including confirmation of the financial results of Ehrlich for the year ending 31 December 2005 and on the expiry of the waiting period under the Hart Scott Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976. Completion of the acquisition is expected before the end of the first quarter.

Doug Flynn, Chief Executive of Rentokil Initial, said:

'We are delighted to announce the proposed acquisition of Ehrlich which has an excellent reputation and a strong market position in the growing US pest control industry. This transaction is a major development in our global pest control strategy and significantly improves our scale and opportunity in this attractive market.'

Ehrlich brings us a substantial business with a strong customer service culture. Both Ehrlich and our own US businesses are well managed and have shown solid growth over the last few years. When combined they will create a strong platform from which to develop an expanded position in the US pest control market.'

Victor Hammel, current President of Ehrlich and CEO designate for the combined pest control operation, said:

'Our relationship with Rentokil Initial will be beneficial for both companies. Rentokil Initial has a reputation for quality that is very similar to ours and we believe there is a great deal we can learn from each other. Over the next few months, we will consider how to meld the best practices from each organization so we can better serve our residential and commercial customers.'

Co-owner of Ehrlich, Bobby Hammel said:

'We chose Rentokil Initial because they respected the culture we have cultivated over the past 78 years. The future well-being of our co-workers is of the utmost importance to us, and we feel that this expanded organization will offer them many new opportunities.'

Closure of Loss-Making Linen and Workwear Services

Rentokil Initial plc (the 'Company') today announced the closure of the loss-making UK Linen and Workwear operations of Initial Hygiene UK, in order to focus on its market-leading UK Washroom and Dustmat business. Having explored thoroughly all options for exiting the loss-making operations, the Company has regretfully concluded that these operations will be closed on 30 April 2006.

A full consultative process with customers and affected employees will begin immediately, in an effort to ensure continuity of service with alternative suppliers and to minimise the potential redundancies resulting from the closure. The Linen and Workwear operations currently employ some 2,000 people across the UK and up to 1,700 positions could be made redundant. An employee consultation process will be undertaken and the Company will make all efforts to minimise redundancies including considering alternative employment within the Rentokil Initial Group. No final decisions as to numbers of redundancies will be made until the conclusion of the collective and individual consultation processes.

Rentokil Initial plc announced in November 2004 that it had taken the decision to exit the loss-making Linen and Workwear elements of Initial Hygiene UK. The UK Linen and Workwear business has been significantly underinvested, is based on an inefficient distribution structure and historically has pursued a flawed commercial strategy. The Company will continue to develop its UK Washroom and Dustmat business, Washroom Solutions UK, which has a strong and profitable market position. To that end, management started the complex and lengthy process of separating the plant and delivery mechanisms relating to Linen and Workwear from the activities being retained. This separation was finally completed in December 2005.

In parallel with the operational separation, the Company explored in detail how best to structure an exit and so stem increasing losses, while protecting the value of the on-going UK Washroom and Dustmat business. In particular, the Company examined whether it was possible to sell the business to one or more third parties while ensuring an orderly and controlled transfer of customer contracts. However, the serious risk of regulatory intervention and the consequent uncertainty in terms of timing, costs and eventual exit, has led the Board reluctantly to conclude that a third party sale is not feasible and that closure is the only viable option.

Customers of the UK Linen and Workwear services have been notified of the decision today and the Company will provide comprehensive support to them in sourcing alternative supply.

The UK Linen and Workwear activities' 2004 turnover was £55 million with operating losses of £5 million. In 2005, turnover is broadly similar with operating losses of circa £9 million. An exceptional asset impairment charge of £28 million was reported in the first half of 2005 and further reorganisation costs of £4 million have been incurred in the second half. At the half year it was announced that total one-off exit costs were expected to be in the range of £40-45 million (in addition to operating losses to the point of exit). The impact of closing rather than selling this activity is expected to increase these costs to £45-50 million. Included in this amount is £13-18 million of cash costs to be incurred in the first half of 2006. These will be significantly offset by the sale of surplus property and other assets during 2006 and 2007.

Doug Flynn, Chief Executive of Rentokil Initial plc, said:

'Our UK Linen and Workwear activities have sustained considerable losses for several years and the need to exit this operation has been clear for some time. It is always a difficult decision to close an operation, especially one that employs so many people. We are committed to doing all we can to minimise the level of redundancies and to support all our employees and customers affected by the closure.'

'Today's announcement does not impact our Linen and Workwear operations in continental Europe where we have built up a number of profitable and growing businesses. In the UK our focus is now on delivering the opportunity we have in washrooms and dustmats by improving efficiency and service to our customers.'
