Tate & Lyle PLC invests in a Sugar plant in Israel

8 March 2006

Tate & Lyle, the global renewable ingredients company, today announced the formation of a joint-venture with an Israeli partner to build and operate a sugar plant in Israel.

The joint-venture company will supply high quality sugars to a range of users in the Israeli market. This will partially replace traditional sugar imports from the European Union, which will be restricted following European sugar regime reform and the WTO ruling on exports.

Tate & Lyle will acquire 65% equity in the new Company, the net assets of which will be £8.1m ($14.3m).

"This investment is another example of how we are reacting positively to changes to the European sugar regime," said Stanley Musesengwa, Chief Operating Officer, Tate & Lyle PLC. "It will enable us to continue serving our customers effectively by replacing our existing European Union exports to Israel."

"Tate & Lyle has been exporting white sugar from its London-based refinery to Israel for over twenty-years and has built a reputation for high sugar quality, prompt deliveries and good customer service."

The plant will be designed by Tate & Lyle's specialist engineering division, Tate & Lyle Process Technology. ENDS

Tate & Lyle has become aware of the re-appearance of a low-calorie tabletop sweetener product branded as 'Altern' in a small number of Wal*Mart stores in the US. Altern is described as containing sucralose. Tate & Lyle has analysed samples of this product and believes it to contain an active ingredient of Chinese origin. Work is being carried out to determine if this ingredient meets the stringent US Food and Drug Administration specifications and / or infringes on Tate & Lyle's intellectual property. This ingredient cannot be branded as SPLENDA® Brand Sweetener; SPLENDA® is the leading US low-calorie tabletop sweetener brand.

The quantity of sucralose required for a single table-top product such as Altern is extremely small and the supply of sucralose to the table-top sector is a minor part of Tate & Lyle's SPLENDA® Sucralose ingredients business. Tate & Lyle does not expect the launch of this product, even were it to be on a national scale, to have any material effect on the results of its sucralose division and is making this statement in recognition of the high level of investor interest in sucralose.
