Read your bio: I see you served as “Special Assistant United States Attorney” in 1994.

Thank you for your service, sir.

However, your belief you spent 20 years investigating and prosecuting financial crimes when you were NOT a law enforcement agent nor prosecutor is disturbing.

Their lawyers say this, John, because your lawyers are “prosecuting” “crime” — rewind to beginning, see your role in causing this.

Crypto that is NOT a “security” is exactly like commodity property. I believe #Bitcoin is a crypto security.

Why can't the SEC do its job properly?

As an unregistered “crypto security” #Bitcoin is NOT illegal.

Unregistered securities are NOT a crime.

The SEC is NOT a law enforcement agency.

Get your facts straight. First-Principles from 1933 Act. You NEVER did the job properly.

"Every single Coinbase customer is betting that whatever crypto they buy will increase in value."

Tell me who is taking a legal obligation to make them believe so? Nobody.

And for this reason a token sold outside an agreement promising returns is not a security.

That's a fair point, I should not have been so absolute. Along those lines, I just edited my post to "The typical Coinbase customer" as opposed to "Every single Coinbase customer." Thanks for commenting and I can appreciate your criticism.

Former Chief of Internet Enforcement of @SECGov believes it is financial crime for the typical Coinbase customer to buy crypto in order to “bet” that whatever crypto they buy will increase in value, like buying baseball cards or Beanie Babies.

@SECGov you have a systemic corruption problem.

Fix this or tell Congress to eliminate the Securities & Exchange Commission from our system of federal regulation entirely.

We can replace the SEC with directive to actual law enforcement agencies to investigate + prosecute crime.
