Thank you for the opportunity to be able to comment. My comment will be plain and simple. I do not wish for this amendment to go through. I do not need nor desire protection from 3rd party that will expose my personal and private data to others by doing so. I had many opportunities to see the so called "protection" of my investments in the stock market and did not like what I seen. It never intended to protect me, as an individual retail investor. In fact the opposite. The crypto world is a beautiful breath of fresh air. It is my freedom to express my feelings and enthusiasm for an idea that someone else published on blockchain. And if I wish to invest my money that I earned and paid my taxes for it is my freedom to do so without anyone watching. Crypto world is no more prone to scam than any conventional fiat currency establishment. And the result I see in the there are not reassuring me that we need any if this in the crypto world. I can check myself the credibility of any code or contract written on blockchain myself before I wish to associate myself with it. Something I cannot do in any other realm SEC is involved in. I want to keep my freedom and my control of knowing what I do and make my own due diligence. I learned more about crypto from the free speech we can exercise in the crypto world than from anything else. Everything is crystal clear because it is a code. If it is written so it cannot be changed, it cannot be changed. The rules cannot be bend. I want it to stay that way. Please leave my freedom of speech untouched. As well as my freedom of choice. I appreciate your desire to protect me, but I gracefully reject your offer as an individual, falling into the category of your subject. I do not need it. I am against this proposal. My freedom of speech showing itself as me publishing my transactions in the blockchain must not be regulated. Thank you.
