

I do not endorse this proposal.

My stance against this proposal remains unchanged due to the existing regulations that ensure control over a company's decisions rests with long-term investors. These investors are vested in the company's sustained success and perceive the overall price and associated security risks as justified costs. In return, they can participate in the company's achievements and influence decisions safeguarding their investments.

My opposition to this proposal persists because the current system empowers committed investors to have a meaningful say in critical decisions and enables companies to gauge the dedication and support exhibited by individual investors toward their values, principles, and proposals.
