I have several online brokerage equity accounts which I trade. These are personally owned funds with total worth well in excess of $1M. I desire help in trading and want to use non-professional traders--family members and friends--to assist in trading. I will set controls that will limit losses, and hopefully some of these novice traders will develop and do well. Participants will not be responsible for losses, and will be compensated as independent agents with a portion of any gains from the account they are assigned to trade.

Any SEC problem?
