Dear Ms. Murphy,

The newly proposed rule on shareholder proxy access is unfair to small businesses. If given the green light, the costs of these director campaigns from the small group of shareholders nominating the candidate, would shift to the business and all shareholders. I am extremely concerned about how this would affect my business.

Prior to owning my own company, I was a homemaker. Then, I came across a business opportunity that I could not pass up. So, three months ago I opened my own car wash and detail shop. In this business, I support our military and offer ten-percent discounts to my customers who are active or retired military.

If the costs of running my company were hiked in any way, I would be forced to close my doors. This is not something I want to do; I planned on passing my business to my two children in the future. I urge you to prevent these changes from happening and hurting small businesses.

Sincerely,

Debbie Sapp
