Re: Submit Comments on S7-32-10 Prohibition Against Fraud, Manipulation, or Deception in Connection with Security-Based Swaps Prohibition against Undue Influence over Chief Compliance Officers Position Reporting of Large Security-Based Swap Positions

Dear SEC,

Why do we even need a rule to prohibit against Fraud? I mean, why wouldn't we protect the market from fraud from the beginning? The title of the proposed rule pretty much tells us that Chief Compliance Officers are being told what to and not to report. Wow, this is some sort of insanity, right? Not only do large institutions and hedge funds get to trade in 'dark pools' to avoid price discovery, now they get to hide fraud in the swaps, which are already over leveraged. How can so many people go to work at the sec, get paid by the taxpayer, then turn a blind eye when there are people selling property they don't own and don't bother to even borrow? Fails to deliver are at the center of these swaps and all other shenanigans going on in the stock market. These people stealing from companies and investors for decades finally dug deep enough hole to fill with their garbage fake stocks they've been making from nothing and can't get out. Since no one wants to do anything about it, I guess we will just let the economy go to full blown depression or hyperinflation just to protect wallstreet hedge funds. The hard working taxpayers are tired of supporting their gambling habits. We want transparency in the markets. If you have nothing to hide, then why not make all data public? Why are all the real transactions hidden in dark pools? How can we have price discovery when no retail order goes to lit markets? Top cop at sec said this himself, "majority of retail orders are executed off market." You have to enforce these rules to protect the integrity of the markets. How are we supposed to be the moral example of fair markets, when there are so many bad apples cheating and failing to deliver stolen property? We have to make these thieves accountable for selling property they do not own. Share lending should also be prohibited, especially without prior consent or knowledge by the investor. We want to invest our money in the stock market, but we don't want to lose in a pay to win casino.

A very concerned investor,
